THE congratulations being received by the L City of Nanaimo for Its Royal visit arrangements should convey a lesson to other communities for future occasions of the kind. In Nanaimo ceremonial was cut to a minimum, and the welcome extended was human, natural and spontaneous. Elsewhere in Canada it was too often made stilted by pomp and protocol.

All over the country officialdom rushed in to monopolize the show. Ninety per cent of the Royal visitors' time was engulfed by receptions and presentations that actually couldn't have mattered less. The Princess and the Duke have not seen Canada, nor have the people of Canada really seen their Royal guests. A fleeting glimpse of a motor cavalcade is a poor substitute for what loyal citizens had a right to expect.

In the matter of children, whom the Princess in advance had hoped would be accorded priority, those cities which shepherded them in arenas and stadiums showed a foresight sadly lacking here. When children are forced to stand for hours on end they deserve more than a passing wave of the hand. The same goes for adults, and it is a tribute to the innate loyalty of Canadians that they should have waited so long and so patiently for so brief a view.

Royal visitors are at the mercy of local officials who plan the visit and show them round. Here, as in so many other places during the tour, they were smothered by a brass cordon that shut them off from all but the briefest contact with the people they came to see. Our visitors should have been allowed ample time to watch Canadians at work and at play, to understand better their way of life, to reach and be reached by the populace on whose fealty the monarchy rests.

Instead, they were rushed from pillar to post, almost indeed harried, so that pettyfogging officials could shake their hands and for ever after hug the experience to their egotistic breasts. Much public discontent and disappointment was the inevitable result, and quite possibly the Royal visitors themselves shared, in private, an equal disappointment. One trusts that next time things will be vastly different, both for everwelcome Royal representatives and their hosts, the people at large.

EVERYBODY in the world would be I remarkable, if we used all our eyes to see them."

see where most of us are blind, but they could have been applied to

No one more remarkable, surely, ever lived in our day.

The essence of any man is not easily distilled, even by such a volume as this, although private correspondence does tell much of an individual, and there are here some revealing letters.

* * * A strange character, the man who "made and played with kings and prime ministers," as he told a Labor M.P. when seeking to have him call off a witchhunt that pictured Lawrence as a super-spy on the Northwest Frontier. And all the while the erstwhile leader of the Hedjaz revolt was doing nothing more dangerous than clerking as an ordinary aircraftsman and translating Homer. Lawrence conceded his abnormality, and so how could the Colonel Blimps, let alone Labor M.P.'s, understand.

Here was the former uncrowned King of Arabia, with governorships and great commands at his disposal, intent only on burying himself in theranks. This was so far against his caste, and indeed himself-the tells in "The Mint," still unpublished, how he stood outside the recruiting office in fear and trembling before he' went in)-that he needed the personal pull of an air marshal to get into the R.A.F.

He didn't stay long. His name was now Ross but six months later someone exposed his identity and he was thrown out. Friends got him into the-Tank Corps-again as a private-this time as T. E. Shaw, but he hated army life. He found it "horrible, degrading." and longed to get back into the air force, which he visioned as a new and uncharted service. (This was in 1922).

* * * And this notwithstanding the offence to a fastidious nature. The R.A.F. barracks was "libertine, brutal, loudvoiced and unwashed," and Lawrence was as austere as the desert he once claimed his own.

Three years it took him to return to the air force, three years of despair. Finally only the hint of suicide and the intervention of G. B. Shaw and Stanley Baldwin secured his transfer.

There for ten more years he remained, obscure, humble. He had created, inspired and led Arab legions to victory, yet he persistently refused. promotions and responsibility. He wrotes "Seven Pillars of Wisdom." but deemed this literary masterpiece a failure. He posed, and was tortured by his conscience for so doing. He was a mischievous imp and a recluse both.

Why did Lawrence turn his back on an epic past and hide himself in lowly ranks? Some thought it because the Arabs he loved had been betrayed and he, irrationally, blamed himself. Personally I'm inclined to the theory that his gifts flowered to genius and drove him close to 'the border of mental breakdown, and that he knew of his peril and sought sanctuary.

When he died of a road accident an Arab sheikh exclaimed in grief: "Oh! If only he had died in battle! man whose hand was never closed, but open. . . . Of manhood the man. In freedom free; a mind without equal; know about Wheelon Churchill. war leader and states. An. stirring orator, an author whose strilings are great English literature, wer know how Churchill lives when to als not in the public eye; how this ama log man, nearing 77, manages to eram into his days enough to fill two men's tome.

The scene of Churchill's hap py life is Chartwell, his country house near Westerham, Kent. He always has been a great home lover.

* * * "Home, sweet home," counts .jor everything in his life. Wherever he and however important the business's may be, he always is anxious to get to his own home.

There, at 6 o'clock each morning, he starts a day that would make most men dizzy. His first job is to read all the morning papers, followed by his correspondence; official papers and documents.

Secretaries are at hand. Churchill dictates continuously. His speeches always are dictated to relays of secretaries, and he prepares his speeches to the smallest detail. The same with his war memoirs. These are dictated, too. Then starts the detailed job of personal revision by hand.

After two hours' solid work in his bedroom-newspapers, correspondence, official documents, dictation he has

Then Churchill relaxes a little, Perhaps a walk in the grounds with Rufus. his pet poodle. He is passionately fond of animals. When any of them become ill he is upset and worried. This is true not only of his personal pets, but of the farm stock as well. He displays many qualities of a firstclass veterinarian in tending to their ills and injuries.

His tour of the grounds and the home farm is not impersonal or detached. He has the greatest enthusiasm for the details of crop cultivation, stock raising, and garden layout.

In short, every routine job being carried on at Chartwell has an absorbing interest for him-a constant illustration of how he is able to concentrate on the job in hand to the exclusion of

After this "constitutional," there comes more work in his study. If he has to make a big speech later in the day, this may occupy him in final revision (and he always insists on checking references and quotations. himself). Or it may be another chapter to write of his latest book; or meeting friends and correspondents.

Churchill loves to have around him friends whose minds and talk stimulate him. That is why his small luncheon parties are such sparkling affairs. These are the occasions when comments come in a steady stream.

Churchill also loves to have young people around him. With his grandchildren, or the children of friends, he remps and plays with enthusiasm; that, in turn, becomes the absorbing occupation of the moment.

There is one rule which Churchill has obeyed for many years. Every day, after lunch, he goes to bed. Not for a mere 40 winks. No, it must be a deep, undisturbed sleep for a couple of hours or so.

Therein perhaps lies the secret of his amazing resiliency and stamina; and he advises every hard-working man with heavy responsibilities to do

Even in the darkest days of the war, this rule of a daytime sleep was observed wherever possible. He cannot alway go to bed after lunch. He may have a speech in the House of commons in the afternoon, or have ome other engagement. If such appointments intervene, then Churchill bes to bed in the late afternoon, or Dinner is the golden hour of the affair. Churchill has the great capacity too be able to throw off all his cares a nd worries at will, and become completely relaxed.

He has a room at Chartwell fitted with many tanks of beautifully colored tropical fish. In this hobby, too, we get an inslight into the Churchill mind. Not for him the negative, passive job of merely a dmiring the beautiful fish, He has read books on the subject, he bserves and studies the lovely little things, knows as an expert their habits, their likes and dislikes.

- | | | | | | Churchill always feeds his pets himself. Outside he constructed fish ponds, fed by water from the streams at Chartwell They are stocked with a varied collection of fish. He is very attached to the black swans, presented to him by Australian friends.

When the weather is favorable. Churchill loves to putter about the grounds. Many have heard of his bricklaying achievement, when he built the wall round his lorchard. He enjoys this work. Recently be built several outhouses. This, by the way, does not mean hiring a firm of builders and working with the mien. In this case, he does all the work himself, even to the helty job of mixing the cement.

Perhaps murchill's greatest mental relaxation is found in painting. It is not only when he is on holiday that he paints tos famous irandscapes. He has a studio at Chartwell where he spends many hours, far greater cometrical regularity than other cities. And apparently its shopping districts are distributed pretty evenly amidst the residential areas. For in addition to the vivid street lamps, there are hundreds of red and green colored lights, both traffic signals and neon shop and restaurant lights, winking and shimmering far and wide over the scene.

It has the exciting impression of a Christmas tree. It seems somehow a festive and happy city as you wheel and bank over it in the approach to the airfield.

New York, for all the splender of its floodlit skyscrapers and the boiling jewels of light in its core around Broadway and Forty-Second Street, is a poor thing to pass over by air at night. Long before you reach the city, you have passed over mile wpon mile of suburbs, many of them dimly and raggedly lighted. When you do reach the city itself, you can look down on random and higgledy-piggledy areas that you know, even in the dark, are tenements or slums. When you do reach the heart of New York, it is like a cauldron of light. It looks as though something monstrous were being toria is badly in need of a community centre for its older members now here low. Many men and women past the a months and years with nothing to do but eat and sleep, with little if any association with others, a feeling of not being wanted, tired In body and mind, lonesome. Or a choice of joining some club to attend at a predated time mostly evenings, take part in smoking, card playing,

Permit me to suggest that Prince Robert House can and should be made available for the use by older retired men and women regardless of financial standing; as a place where they can meet and make friends, debate, exchange knowledge and information; bring a few hand tools to do some hobby work; to come and go at will day or evenings as conditions permit; arrange for a dance with home-made music by the members, some refreshments provided by the women members, all which can be free without obligation. Our city fathers might reason the matter from the standpoint of profit and loss as to tax income. To demolish the building and use land as a parking lot might or might not result in a profit, but would benefit a few motorists. To sell the building might produce a tax income of a few thousand a year, but to hand the building over as a community centre for the aged amounts to the loss of a possible certain income in taxes. But will they stop to consider that the per capita loss peryear in tax income only could amount to a few dimes per year, or to give a good reason why it is just and fit to provide the younger members of our community with land and buildings for sports and recreation of many kinds out of taxation funds, and at the same time deny the older members the right to use the Prince Robert House, I am sure after due consideration our city fathers will see daylight and act accordingly, GEO. BASKIN. 1609 Redfern Street, Victoria, B.C.

BRITISH DEFENSE MEDAL

Sir .- I read in Sunday's Daily Colonist that Me William Atkins had just received his British Defense Medal and it is believed that it is the first such award given to a Victoria resident. I would like to point out that I was also awarded this model for my work with the Women's Vol tary Service. I have not received the medal yet but have the ribbon. So you want to pay for good coffee!

Well, you can if you're "coffee-wise." There IS a way to pay less, and with no loss of quality. In fact, it improves quality. It's the Nob Hill way ... and it actually saves you or more on every pound you buy.

All this ... and I 100. Nob Hill is your kind of coffee.

It's fresher, that's all. It's the same quality, same flavor you are accustomed to. But Nob Hill is not factory-ground weeks before you get it. It comes to you in its original packagethe whole coffee bean itself. That's the whole secret-the secret of its superlative freshnessand the reason for its price. Sealed inside those coffee beans is a lot of flavor, and it stays there until YOU release it. Have you ever tasted fresh coffee? Really fresh? Freshly roasted! Fresh from the grinder! Just wait till you taste Nob Hill!

You KNOW it's fresh when you grind it yourself

To begin with, Nob Hill comes to you weeks sooner than other coffees...that means weeks fresher. Nob Hill whole coffee beans are rushed fresh from the roasting ovens to your SAFEWAY Store. There you'll find a handy coffee mill. When you flip the switch, it delivers the freshest coffee in town. Freshly roasted! Freshly ground! It's so fresh you can "taste" it. Also, it's ground precisely for your coffee maker. You have a choice of FOUR grinds. And because you grind it yourself, you save 4¢ or more on every pound. Simple, isn't it?
